Kelly Le Brock meets her maker in Weird Science

wierd science

Just when you thought it was safe to go back to watching videos, the edibly dishy Kelly Le Brock who left all the menfolk drooling in the aisles in The Woman In Red is back to send their blood pressure soaring again in Weird Science, a comedy to be released on video by CIC next month.

The story, from the writer and director of Sixteen Candles and The Breakfast Club, John Hughes, is about two spotty teenagers who, unable to get girls of their own, get the inspiration from a clip from the classic, Frankenstein on video to bring one of their own design to life via their computer. With the help of a pile of Playboy centrefolds and an assortment of household gadgets they achieve success . . . in the form of Kelly Le Brock, the beautiful, steamy, breathless answer to every man's dream. More about this comedy which could quite easily have been called Porky's Meets the Bride of Frankenstein next month.
